

The TIAA Paul A. Samuelson Award

for outstanding scholarly writing on lifelong financial security

Named in honor of the late Nobel Prize winner and former CREF trustee, the TIAA Paul A. Samuelson Award is given annually by the TIAA Institute to recognize an outstanding research publication that helps advance Americans' lifelong financial well-being. A panel of distinguished judges selects the award recipient, and the TIAA Institute announces the winner each year during the annual meeting of the Allied Social Sciences Associations.

About the TIAA Institute

The mission of the TIAA Institute, a think tank within TIAA, is to enhance the financial security and organizational effectiveness of TIAA clients and society at large through in-depth research and thought leadership. The TIAA Institute's work spans financial and longevity literacy, lifetime income, retirement plan design, behavioral finance, workforce issues, and health care trends, all critical components of lifelong financial well-being.

With a team of economists and program staff, fellows, and strategic partners, the TIAA Institute organizes symposiums on issues critical to the academic community, assembles leading thinkers with diverse views to explore key topics from multiple angles, sponsors rigorous academic research, and collaborates with premier organizations to expand the TIAA Institute's reach and impact. The TIAA Institute's award program recognizes leadership excellence in higher education and scholarly achievements in financial security.
